House Bills

HB 275, relative to schools approved for a school tuition program by a school board.

Committee of Conference: Accept Senate and incorporate CofC amendment

PRO-LIBERTY: This bill allows a pupil's parents to pay the difference between a receiving district's school tuition cost and the sending district tuition cap in a school tuition program.

With the proposed committee amendment, there must be at least one option that is a public school or public academy that does not require additional tuition payment from the parent.

- Since the "Croydon bill", a few school districts with town tuitioning have been setting a tuition cap, any amount over which would be paid by parents who selected those schools. Putting it into law would allow more districts to go this route, which can expand school choice and provide certainty to parents making use of town tuition dollars at institutions that charge a higher fee than the town's base rate.
- All current tuitioning towns already have a public school or public academy option that does not require additional tuition payment from the parents.
